Is Privacy a Dead Letter?

October 30, 2019 by Summer Lewis

In Osgoode Hall Law School's course Legal Values: Artificial Intelligence, professor Maura Grossman engages the class with weekly reflections on the legal and ethical issues with new advancements in technology. Based on class discussions and reading materials, students are encouraged to provide their opinions on specific questions each week. On one particular reflection, Professor Grossman assigned the following questions:

- Is privacy a dead letter?
- Regardless of whether or not you think so, how do we make the world safe and habitable under the present circumstances?

Written by Summer Lewis, a second year JD Candidate at Osgoode Hall Law School. Summer is also the Content Editor of the IPilogue.

Saying Goodbye to (not so) Forever 21

October 29, 2019 by Alessia Monastero

On September 29, fast fashion retailer Forever 21 filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, pursuant to the US bankruptcy code, closing 350 stores worldwide and all of its 44 stores in Canada. The Los Angeles-based chain, having catered to young shoppers looking for inexpensive clothing for decades, has found itself struggling against the rising competition brought by online channels. From a legal perspective, the company is not unfamiliar with the challenges arising from operating in a multi-billion dollar industry. Often labelled as a "fashion copycat," Forever 21 has found itself in the midst of many noteworthy IP legal battles.
