Data in Support of Evidence-Based Policymaking

March 18, 2021 by Emily Xiang

In developing policies to address various issues, policymakers rely on data to identify areas of need, establish regimes of implementation, and gauge effectiveness along the way. To this end, it is important to develop sound and high-quality collection methods that meet the specific needs of entities, both extant and potential, seeking to use IP.

Emily Xiang is a JD candidate at Osgoode Hall Law School. She is an IPilogue Writer and an executive for the Intellectual Property Society of Osgoode.

The IP Lunch Club: Overcoming Intellectual Property Issues Facing Artists, Writers, & Designers

24 March 2021

The IP Innovation Clinic is proud to partner with Sandbox Centre to produce the IP Lunch Club series. Every Wednesday in March, our IP Innovation Clinic Fellows will present free virtual information sessions covering topics related to protecting IP rights in business, ideas, or products.

In Part 4 of 5, our Fellows will discuss protections afforded to artists, writers, and designers under Canada's Copyright Act. It may seem silly, but understanding and discussing "what is art?" will help to protect your creative ideas. The team will highlight accessibility issues arising from artists' lack of general awareness of their legal rights and discuss digital fashion as an emerging creative industry, including how it shifts consumption models.
